PRICKLY PEAR PROVES PEST IN QUEENSLAND

The prickly pear has obtained such a strong hold upon large areas of land in Queensland, and also in parts of northern New South Wales, that it is to be hoped some economical method of exterminating it will shortly be found. Messrs T. Harvey Johnston and Henry Tyrone, who were appointed by the Queensland government to inquire into the subject in other parts of the world, have now returned to Australia, having visited all those countries in which the prickly pear is indigenous or has been introduced. They went to Java, Singapore, the Malay States, Ceylon, India, South Africa, the Canary Islands, the Mediterranean, West Indies, South America, Central America, and the United States. They have seen the prickly pear in its natural home and its adopted homes, and they have returned with the information that they have found parasites likely to be of great value in checking the pest without themselves becoming a pest. It would be very surprising if they did not find some parasites of the kind, but whether they have found a specific which will accomplish the desired object, without causing harm elsewhere, is a question which will require very grave consideration. We have pests enough in Australia, and if another is to be introduced to fight the prickly pear, who shall say that it will not turn its attention to other vegetation when the supply of prickly pear diminishes?

So far experience in introducing "natural enemies" to fight pests has not been encouraging. Scorpions, weasels, and foxes, if let loose, in large enough numbers, might soon exterminate the rabbits, but they would soon turn their attention elsewhere when the rabbit supply failed. Dr. Danyez, the eminent French scientist, claimed to have discovered a disease which was fatal to rabbits, while proving harmless to other animals. It was certainly proved to be harmless, and also it was asserted that it was useful for the destruction of rabbits. If it had been efficacious as a rabbit destroyer, it is pretty certain that it would have been dangerous to other animals, such as sheep. Judging from all the experiments made with all sorts of species, it seems to be pretty certain that mechanical methods must be used for the eradication of the prickly pear pest, as well as the rabbits. In South Africa the farmers have for years successfully fought the prickly pear with an arsenical solution, and in Queensland experiments are now being conducted on a large scale with chemical sprays. The government will not tackle the job of clearing the prickly pear in districts where it is very thick, because the cost would be more than the value of the land when cleared. But it is known that the pear is spreading every year, and every patch of it is a menace to all the land within a radius of fifty miles. Rooting out the prickly pear would not only restore the land to use, but would save thousands of acres of valuable land from being overrun by the pest in the future. It is a national concern, and the Queensland and New South Wales governments should take practical steps.

NOTED ENGLISH INVENTOR

SUCCUMBS AT AGE OF 86. LONDON. — Sir Joseph Wilson Swan, inventor of the first incandescent lamp, died here today. He was 86 years old and was born in Sunderland, England.

Sir Joseph spent many years of his life experimenting with electric lamps. In 1879 he succeeded in solving the problem of producing an incandescent light, thus making possible the general use of electricity for lighting purposes. He was the inventor of many other electrical devices, including a miner's safety lamp and an electric meter. He made many improvements in accumulators.

He was also well known for his photographic appliances. He perfected the carbon process and the dry plate, which revolutionized photography. He was at one time president of the British Institution of Electrical Engineers and vice-president of the Royal Photographic Society. He had received many decorations from foreign governments.

The proprietor of the leading drug store in a small Kentucky town was coming out of the front door of his place not long ago, when a small boy came tearing round the corner at top gallop with his head down and butted squarely into him. "Hey, kid!" demanded the druggist. "What's the matter?" "I'm tryin' to keep two boys from gettin' into a fight," panted the youngster. "Who are the boys?" asked the druggist. "I'm one of 'em." —Saturday Evening Post.

LIABILITY SMALL FOR VICTIMS OF TITANIC WRECK. (By Latest Mail)

WASHINGTON. — Because the steamship Titanic struck an iceberg, rather than another British ship, the supreme court today held that the owner, the Oceanic Steam Navigation Company, was entitled to have its liability for loss of life and property in suits brought in American courts limited in accordance with American maritime law.

This means that those who sued in American courts will get virtually nothing, the law limiting liability to the salvage from the wreck, and the passenger and freight money collected from the passage, about $90,000 in all. The total claims against the company have reached $13,000,000.

The court held that where a lone ship is wrecked the law of the country in which the suit is brought governs the limitation of liability. In briefs in the case it was said that under British law, the liability of the owner of the Titanic would be about $3,000,000, if it found that the wreck occurred without the fault or knowledge of the owners, and unlimited if it occurred with their fault or knowledge. The presence of J. Bruce Ismay, managing director, on the Titanic at the time of the wreck, complicated this question.

"We see no absurdity in supposing," at him.

Justice McKenna dissented, holding that the British law should apply.

"What's the matter, Willie?" asked his mother as the lad entered the house weeping. "The boy across the way hit me," he replied. "Oh, well, I wouldn't cry for that," she returned. "Show that you can be a little man."
